

Chloe Arsenault – Panelist 1

Chloe Arsenault, a 22-year-old from Sudbury, Ontario, recently graduated as a Civil and Mining Engineering Technician. Coming from a family with a strong background in the mining industry, she is proud to be the first woman in her family to pursue this career path. Chloe has always dreamed of working in mining and has actively participated in local events organized by women in trades and the mining industry to inspire other young women.

Noticing a lack of female role models in skilled trades, Chloe has become a prominent voice in women's empowerment movements, sharing her skills and personal stories to pave the way for other women in male-dominated careers. She adeptly balances two distinct roles, embodying both a pageant crown and a mining hard hat, symbolizing her diverse experiences. Through her five-year journey in pageantry, she emphasizes the importance of using one's platform to serve as a role model for women.

Chloe's initiative, "Tiaras and Trades," challenges stereotypes and affirms that women can excel professionally while embracing their femininity. What sets her apart is her hands-on approach—she personally welded her own tiara, demonstrating her dedication to proving that pursuing a trade career doesn't compromise one's identity as a woman. Through her volunteer work and platform, Chloe empowers women by sharing her voice, skills, and personal stories.
